IMPORTANT ADVICE!

est. Take a goddamn NAP.
Take a minute to breathe, to re-center yourself. Rome wasn't built in one day, & the same should be applied to gender. I know there are like a thousand steps and goals to achieve, but crafting one's gender takes time and rest. Let the building blocks stack one at a time. You'll get there letter to young

A D A M ...

You spent your entire youth with this body, these roles, these expectations.

Trust him.
He's a doctor. ←

I remember the feeling of existential dread when you got your first period, and your mother happily telling you that you're now a woman. I remember how lost you were, around all these girls in school who could perform femininity without even trying, while you were trying your best to fit in. I remember the confusion you felt when you heard anti-feminist messages from teachers and classmates, basing your worth on what is deemed as biological determinism.

these instances were your reminders of your place in this cisnormative society, but it doesn't have to be this way. you can use this discomfort to build a comfortable space, where fitting in relies on your own wishes. you can go further than the women's section in clothing stores, you can pick the male protagonist in video games without trying to justify it, you can explore your gender in ways that are more complex than being "born in the wrong body."

gender non-conformity is the ultimate proof of your creative mind, you create art out of mundane things, you design with very simple tools, and you use your whole body to express yourself. this is one of your biggest strengths, and I want you to nurture it.

never let this flame die out.

all things considered, my transition is going super well and NOTHING is in my way!!

Sometimes, I wonder if people even see me as trans, let alone non-binary. Whenever I tell them they can use "he/him", they exclusively use those, even if I prefer they use them, maybe it's the easy way out, is it unnatural to them, or do I just not look the part?

what does a non-binary person have to do to pass as such, anyways?
